Since 1949, Camp Seale Harris, a program of Southeastern Diabetes Education Services, has provided a medically-supervised, fun camp experience across Alabama and Northwest Florida for thousands of children with diabetes. Southeastern Diabetes Education Services is a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization dedicated to serving local children and families with diabetes. The unending, everyday management of diabetes can be overwhelming to a family. Camp Seale Harris is a place where everyone—campers, counselors, and volunteer medical professionals—knows about diabetes. Children and teens motivate, inspire, and teach each other with the supervision and real-time feedback of volunteer physicians, nurses, diabetes educators, nutritionists, pharmacists, and counselors. Camp is more than just a place for the campers and counselors who enjoy it year after year. It’s where they connect and are inspired to live well. Camp makes learning fun!

DiaBEATers, a group of families of children with diabetes in the Auburn/Opelika and surrounding areas, focuses on providing fun and exciting events every other month during the school year - including special speakers, movie days, events in the community, and more! We also provide family informative support meetings during the alternate months. The events are offered at little, or no charge. Group meetings are held the second Thursday of each month through the school year - everyone is invited! For meeting times and locations or any other questions, contact Vickie Adkins at (334) 246-1094.

East Alabama DiaBEATers is a non-profit community group in Auburn, Alabama. DiaBEATers is a program of Camp Seale Harris (CSH), an organization dedicated to serving local children and families with diabetes through its overnight, day, family, and community programs. DiaBEATers offers a supportive and informative source for coping and learning to live well with diabetes. The group, which partners with East Alabama Medical Center (EAMC), is comprised of parents of children with diabetes, leaders in the community, and staff involved in the programs provided by CSH. The families are also encouraged to become involved with Camp Seale Harris throughout the year.
